Youth Success Day Highlights Achievements of Juvenile Justice Youth

This month, agencies across the state serving juvenile justice involved youth joined together as part of annual Children’s Week in Tallahassee. Children’s Week also included Juvenile Justice Youth Success Day, held on Wednesday April 14th to highlight the successes of youth.

Emphasizing the strong partnerships between the Department of Juvenile Justice and providers, faith based and community organizations, Youth Success Day included local events throughout the state. In Tallahassee, two young adults were honored for turning their lives around. Sequoria Williams, a recipient of the Florida Juvenile Justice Foundation’s Youth Investment Award Scholarship, is now attending Tallahassee Community College with plans to go on to nursing school. Addressing the crowd, that included DJJ Secretary Frank Peterman and Lt. Governor Jeff Kottkamp, Sequoria thanked her mother for supporting her efforts and future goals.

FJJA was proud to work with member agencies HBI and G4S to honor David Barnes, a recent graduate of Avon Park Youth Academy, who was recognized for his achievements. David earned his GED while at Avon Park, and while working with the Home Builder’s Institute, received his Pre-Apprenticeship State Certificate of Training in landscaping. While David was at Avon Park, he also worked with a faith based partner, Youth for Christ.

Home Builder’s Trustee and Florida home builder Bill Paul knows how successful the (HBI) Project CRAFT program is when working with youth in the Florida juvenile justice system, saying, “Project CRAFT is a comprehensive rehabilitation program that teaches students the specific skills they need to compete in the employment market and David Barnes is another wonderful example of the effectiveness of this training.”

Kerry Knott, CEO of G4S, who operates Avon Park Academy, said “Change is not always easy. To change your circumstances you need to change your thinking, you need to acquire new skills and knowledge, and change your subsequent actions. David took advantage of the opportunities afforded to him during his commitment to DJJ and Avon Park Youth Academy. It is clear David is on the path of success. We are very proud of him.”

David is currently pursuing enrollment at a technical college and attends church regularly with his family. He receives follow up services through Home Builders Institute and is applying for a Youth Investment Award Scholarship from the Florida Juvenile Justice Foundation.

2010 Legislative Session Winding Down

The governor will soon sign the Gambling compact, which will infuse over $ 1 billion dollars into the state budget over the next 5 years. This year, a much needed $435 million from this agreement will help to balance the budget.

However, the reality that the FMAP funding will not make it down from Washington before session end has sunk in, and is a major game changer. The House had stayed firm in the decision to not include the federal funding in their allocations, but the Senate had spread that money in "back of the bill" amendments.

At the beginning of budget conference, only $115 million of the anticipated $880 million was earmarked to plug holes in the budget with the rest (if it arrives) included in the reserves for next year. As the newsletter goes to print, legislators are racing to meet the deadline for session end on time, with many running for re-election or other elected positions.

Major Reform

This session has been filled with controversial reform bills. The Education reform bill, raced through and past some committees and ultimately was vetoed by the Governor following a backlash from unions and teachers.

Medicaid reform will be no different. The bill was fast tracked through the House and now heads to the Senate for conference discussions. The House version targets Miami Dade as the first county in what will be a 5 year all county plan to reduce the soaring costs of Medicaid through implementation of managed care.

As the Medicaid reform discussions progressed, and with current costs spiraling, legislators argued they were addressing the reality that the current Medicaid system will go bankrupt in the next few years. Critics, however, say that the expansion of managed care to the majority of the state's Medicaid recipients will result in less quality care for Florida's low-income citizens.

As the newsletter goes to print, it appears this bill may not pass the Senate.

Juvenile Justice Legislation

FJJA will be providing an update of legislation in the coming weeks.

Foundation Scholarship Opportunity for Juvenile Justice Involved Youth

The Florida Juvenile Justice Youth Investment Award is now in its 2nd year of awards, made possible by a grant from the Eckerd Family Foundation. The award is designed to assist youth who are or were served by the Florida Department of Juvenile Justice or contracted providers. Applications may be submitted at any time during the year, and are subject to funding availability. The average award is $500.

The funding may be requested to assist youth leaving the juvenile justice system, with the next step essential to academic achievement or workforce readiness which cannot be met through any other available resources essential to the youth's success. Awards may contribute to tuition for post-secondary education, supplies, transportation, education or employability assistance with funding made directly to the vendor.

Florida Adopts Forecasting Technology to Target High Risk Youths

Excerpt from Governing.com, April 14, 2010

In Florida, more than 85,000 kids flood the state's juvenile justice system every year. But this year, officials hope to shrink that number using new technology that examines key historical data to forecast the future. Announced Wednesday, April 14, the Florida Department of Juvenile Justice has implemented new predictive analytics software to analyze predictors such as past offense history, demographics, gang affiliation, peer association and home life environment to find out which kids have a higher chance of recidivism. The idea, then, is to target high-risk cases with programs that address specific needs for rehabilitation so they don't stumble back into the system.

"My job is to put myself out of business," said Mark Greenwald, chief of research and planning at the department. In years past, to predict delinquency numbers the department used Excel, which had limited functionality that allowed the department to look "in the rear-view mirror," Greenwald said, but wasn't advanced enough to help state officials see clearly ahead.

David Barnes Named Youth Ambassador of Juvenile Justice Youth Success Day

David Barnes was selected as one of two Youth Ambassadors of Juvenile Justice Youth Success Day held Wednesday, April 14 during Children's Week in Tallahassee. He was the first youth from a residential commitment program to receive this honor and recognition.

At 17, David was sent to Avon Park Youth Academy. While there he received his GED and selected landscaping as his vocational trade offered through Home Builders Institute.

He received his Pre-Apprenticeship Certificate of Training in Landscaping and employment classes to prepare him for the expectations of the workforce.

During the ceremony, he was awarded $200 by the Florida Juvenile Justice Foundation, as well as matching funds from both G4S Youth Services, LLC and the Home Builders Institute's Herman and Patsy Smith Award. Upon receiving the awards he commented that the money will help pay his application fee to Universal Technical Institute and help obtain a drivers permit.

He attributes his success to "the positive staff at Avon Park, HBI and Youth for Christ who were willing to listen and help me believe in myself. They taught me how to communicate and have hope in my future."

Recently Released Report

Report Calls for Use of Positive Youth Development Approaches In Juvenile Justice

The Coalition for Juvenile Justice (CJJ) has issued a report calling for the use of positive youth development approaches in juvenile justice.

Authors Jeff Butts of John Jay College of Criminal Justice and Gordon Bazemore of Florida Atlantic University argue that treating young offenders purely as villains, who are in need of punishment, is pointless from the perspective of improving their chances to be productive citizens. Treating them purely as victims in need of treatment does not entirely prepare them to be productive adults either.

Positive youth development approaches, say Butts and Bazemore, have the best chance to accomplish what most juveniles need: building on their strengths and connecting them to the community they live in. Say the authors: "Youth who commit violent acts, for example, will always prompt a strong response from law enforcement and corrections. Yet, punishment and deterrence are not effective strategies for helping youth to succeed at school and work."

Causes, Correlates of Girls' Delinquency

Risk and protective factors for girls' delinquency are, in many ways, similar to risk and protective factors for boys' delinquency. However, key gender differences exist, with important implications for program and policy development. Important areas for consideration in programming and policy include delinquency prevention and intervention programs for girls must address physical maltreatment, including sexual abuse and assault; responses to mental health problems such as depression, anxiety, and posttraumatic stress disorder should be integral components of programming for girls; lack of family supervision and monitoring has a causal link to delinquency for both boys and girls; positive school involvement protects against delinquency in both girls and boys; and the link between girls' delinquent behavior and system responses remains an important area for policy, programs, and research.

Youth's Needs & Services: Findings from Survey of Youth in Residential Care

In recent years, the juvenile justice and mental health fields have increasingly recognized the scope of the mental health needs of youth involved in the juvenile justice system and the inadequacy of services to meet these needs. Problems with anger are especially prevalent within this population, with more than 60% of youth reporting that they were easily upset, quick to lose their temper, and often angry.

This is consistent with the fact that 43% of youth are currently in placement for a violent offense (i.e., murder, rape, kidnapping, robbery, or assault). Symptoms of depression and anxiety are also common, with 51% of the custody population reporting that nervous or worried feelings have kept them from doing what they want to do over the past few months, and 52% indicating that they feel lonely "too much of the time." Mental health services in the form of evaluation, ongoing therapy, or counseling are nearly universally available in the facilities, with 97% of youth living in places that provide one or more of these services either inside or outside the facility.

However, despite the relatively high suicide risk in the placement population, individual screening for suicide risk is not common. More than one-fourth (26%) of youth are in facilities that do not screen all youth for suicide risk. Despite the importance of early identification, 45% of youth are in facilities that fail to screen all youth within 24 hours and 26% are in facilities that do not screen any youth at intake (first 24 hours).

Screening for general mental health needs is also limited. Less than half (47%) of youth are in facilities that provide mental health evaluations or appraisals for all residents. Youth are equally likely to receive counseling in their current facility regardless of their answers about their recent mental and emotional problems or previous traumatic experiences. Slightly more than half (53%) of youth in custody say they have personally met with a counselor at their current facility to help them contend with their feelings or emotional problems.
