Update of Florida’s Revenue Forecast: It’s Not Looking Good

What a difference a few months make. Amy Baker, director of the Office of Economic and Demographic Research, says the $275 million surplus originally predicted by the end of this year is now gone and has turned into a budget shortfall of $1.5 billion for 2012-2013. Governor Scott is expected to use the newest revised estimates when crafting his own budget recommendations next month.

Baker said the state economy grew, but it wasn’t enough as Florida remained “in the throes of an abnormally slow recovery.” The culprit, said Amy Baker, is a state economy that is “more anemic than originally anticipated.”

Legislative Committees Reviewing Agency Requests and Reduction Recommendations

This month, legislative committees continue to review agency budget requests and agency reduction priorities and the need for possible cuts based on declining revenue estimates. The FJJA Legislative Agenda does not support any additional cuts this year to DJJ based on the reductions of $70M to the agency last year.

Annie E. Casey Foundation: No Place for Kids: The Case for Reducing Juvenile Incarceration

Prompted by state budget crises and scandals over abuse in many institutions, the report notes a significant movement away from juvenile incarceration. The report questions whether the reliance on juvenile incarceration has paid off, and makes the argument that it has not. Recommendations include limiting placements in residential, investing in community based non-residential, changing perceptions for incarcerating youth, locally funded vs. state, adopting best practices to treat youth and replacing large facilities with smaller treatment oriented facilities for the population with most need. According to Youth Today, the Casey Foundation will begin work next year with a series of states wanting to make policy shifts that will affect their reliance on youth correctional facilities.

Legislative Agenda

No Funding Cuts to Juvenile Justice.

Over the last 3 years, DJJ reductions have amounted to close to $167 million dollars. Last year, the agency took a cut of more than $70 million dollars. As DJJ works to improve the system of care, maintaining current levels of funding will ensure further success in the reduction of crime and other related costs, and second, prevent the flow of youth into adult corrections, reducing the need for future prison construction by taxpayer dollars.

FJJA Recommends:

Taking into consideration the significant budget cut to DJJ last year, FJJA recommends that DJJ be spared further reductions in upcoming session.

Increase Investment in Community Based Services.

Investments should focus on the following program areas: 1) prevention, early intervention and diversion; 2) specialized residential; 3) transition, reentry and aftercare; and 4) education, career education and industry certification.

FJJA Recommends:

If the revenue picture improves – investing additional dollars in community based services and contracted rates will further enhance youth success, lower recidivism rates, provide maximum return on taxpayer investment and sustain proven programs.

Resolution, Reinvestment, and Realignment: Three Strategies for Changing Juvenile Justice

This report examines juvenile justice reforms over past forty years to reduce youth incarceration. They classify them into three basic types: resolution (direct managerial influence over system behavior); reinvestment (financial incentives to change system behavior); and realignment (organizational and structural modifications to alter system behavior). U.S. Department of Justice-Trying Juveniles as Adults: An Analysis of State Transfer Laws and Reporting

In the 1980s and 1990s, legislatures in nearly every state expanded transfer laws that allowed or required the prosecution of juveniles in adult criminal courts. This bulletin provides the latest overview of state transfer laws and practices and examines available state-level data on juveniles adjudicated in the criminal justice system. Currently, 13 states publicly report the total number of their transfers, and even fewer report offense profiles, demographic characteristics, or details regarding processing and sentencing. Although nearly 14,000 transfers can be derived from available 2007 sources, data from 29 states are missing from that total. Florida, like most states, has multiple ways to impose adult sanctions on offenders of juvenile age. These include discretionary judicial waiver, prosecutorial discretion, and statutory exclusion. Support FJJA and FL Network Local Legislative Events

The Florida Juvenile Justice Association is proud to partner with the Florida Network and local provider communities to showcase the local continuum of services. We have added new event dates for the months of November and December, and expect to add a few more.

Many thanks to the Department of Juvenile Justice, local boards and councils and our member organizations including PACE, HBI, White Foundation, Miami Bridge, Evidence Based Associates, Bay Area Youth Services, Eckerd, and Psychotherapeutic Services and others, who have stepped up to plan, support and participate in these events. We applaud and support efforts to highlight the following:

- Effective local programming is serving the needs of at-risk youth in every community.
- Florida leads the nation in prevention, early intervention, and diversion services preventing youth from entering the system.
- Wise investments in juvenile justice programming pay off now and in the future.

Crosswinds Youth Services Recognized for Civil Citation Efforts in Brevard County

With the assistance of a two-year grant from Eckerd Family Foundation, Crosswinds Youth Services serves as lead agency for a civil citation program making a significant difference in Brevard County.

Civil citation, a major focus of the Department of Juvenile Justice, provides early intervention for youth with minor offenses, holding accountable and providing them with specific services. With the family and other organizations working together, issues are addressed quickly, family situation improve, victims see youth taking responsibility, learning from their mistakes and getting back on track.

The impact of a juvenile arrest, often a single one-time event, can follow a youth forever, keeping a youth from getting a job, joining the military, advancing in needed careers in nursing and law enforcement, among other professions. Between October of 2009 and June of 2011, 441 youth were served. Of those youth, 96% stayed crime free a year or more and 90% of families surveyed indicated that the program had a positive impact on their lives. In addition to Crosswinds Youth Services, partners of this effort include the Brevard County Sheriff's office, local police chiefs, the chief judge and representatives of the state attorney's office, public defender's office, Department of Juvenile Justice and Brevard County Public Schools.

Twin Oaks Juvenile Development Wins “Second Chance Act” Grant

Last month, the U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Justice Programs, Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention announced the selection of Twin Oaks Juvenile Development, Inc. (TOJD) to receive $599,000 in funding under the Second Chance Act Juvenile Mentoring Initiative.

Funding under this section helps nonprofit organizations implement mentoring projects to promote the safe and successful reintegration into the community of juveniles who have been incarcerated. Twin Oaks successfully submitted a proposal in partnership with the Florida Department of Juvenile Justice and the Justice Research Center that will support a corporate wide implementation and evaluation of their Project Connect program.

Project Connect is a residential and community-based strategy designed to provide a support system that will assist committed youth with a successful transition back into their community. Twin Oaks has established partnerships with numerous agencies to provide a mentoring program for juvenile offenders that coordinates transition services in a structured, supportive, and seamless process. Project Connect emphasizes the contributions of family, community, faith based and workforce partners in the development of a Community Action Team that will assist the youth upon returning to their community. The program serves as an avenue to establish a “connection” between the transitioning youth and the support services that exist in their community.

Evidence Based Associates Releases Redirection Update

As of October 2011, Redirection officially entered its seventh year of redirecting high-risk youth to evidence based, community-based treatments. The Redirection quarterly progress report has now been released. To read report, click here.

Prodigy Youth Perform at Black Legislative Caucus Breakfast

Youth from three Hillsborough County Prodigy sites had the privilege to perform at a breakfast held for members of the Florida Black Legislative Caucus on Saturday, September 17th 2011. The legislators enjoyed a poetry reading, rap trio, and break dance performance. Each youth was given the opportunity to address the caucus and explain why Prodigy is important to them and the youth were able to personally thank the legislators for their commitment to the program. One youth was so inspired by the support he received, and by the realization of his own talents, that he was moved to tears. The dedication and hard work of the young Prodigy artists helped to make the event a success.

Prodigy Showcase Month: November 2011

This November, youth all over Central Florida will be participating in their annual Prodigy Cultural Arts Program Showcases, spotlighting their visual and performing arts talents. The Showcases celebrate cultures and communities and create an opportunity for Prodigy youth to demonstrate why they are the best of the best. All Prodigy sites are planning events throughout the month and plan to invite the families and friends of participating youth, as well as those in the surrounding communities to attend the Prodigy showcases. This year's theme, Moving Through the Decades, focuses on how popular culture throughout the last 100 years has influenced our youth and the community at large. Each site has chosen a decade to represent through visual and performing arts, focusing on popular culture. More information and the location of Prodigy sites can be found at www.transformingyounglives.org.
