Judges Rule that FDLE Interpretation of Juvenile Records is Too Broad

Many parents and young people have learned the hard way that juvenile records don't automatically disappear once a child turns eighteen. The Florida Department of Law Enforcement (FDLE) for a fee provides details of criminal history - including juvenile delinquency - unless those records have been expunged or sealed. However, a recent ruling should impact the confidentiality of records for youth who have been arrested for misdemeanor charges.

FDLE's policy of selling juvenile criminal history to anyone seeking information is too broad according to a state appeals court which has ruled on a case involving a juvenile identified as "G.G." who stole a can of soda in Miami Beach in 2006 when she was thirteen. After her attorney went on to the FDLE web site, paid $23 for a criminal history check and was able to get access to information about the girl's arrest, a suit was filed.

FDLE argued that its policy to release such information aligned with a broadening of the public records laws in the mid-1990s, making more information about juvenile arrests available. The 1st District Court of Appeal ruled that FDLE has misinterpreted the law.

The court handed down a ruling saying, "We reject FDLE's argument that the law authorizes it to disseminate publically all juvenile criminal history records in its possession and the law is clear that only the criminal records of those juveniles should be available to the public. G.G., who allegedly stole a can of Coke, is not one of the juveniles and her arrest record is not a public record." To read court ruling, click here.

DJJ to Soon Release “Roadmap to System Excellence”

In the coming weeks, Florida DJJ will be releasing "Roadmap to System Excellence" a draft plan to be shared with stakeholders that lays out the agency's plan to move toward a community based juvenile justice model.

The department plans to hold community briefings throughout the state to give stakeholders a chance to comment on the plan. The plan will also be posted on the agency's newly revamped website for comment as well. FJJA will report on community meeting briefing dates and opportunities to participate and provide feedback. Recent Reports

National Survey of Homeless and At Risk Youth Services Providers Published

The Williams Institute at the UCLA Law School, together with the True Colors Fund and the Palette Fund, recently published "Serving Our Youth: Findings from a National Survey of Services Providers Working with Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Youth Who Are Homeless or At Risk of Becoming Homeless." The report corroborates the results of earlier studies, many of which were only regional in scope. The findings of this survey include:

- LGBT youth comprise approximately 40% of the clientele served by the agencies represented, including about 43% of clients utilizing drop-in centers, 30% of clients utilizing street outreach programs, and 30% of clients utilizing housing programs.
- Family rejection on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity was the most frequently cited factor contributing to LGBT youth running away or being kicked out.
- Over half of homeless and at risk LGBT youth report emotional, physical and sexual abuse in their family.
- The lack of government (federal, state and local) funding was identified as the primary barrier to improving services related to reducing LGBT youth homelessness.

The survey included services providers located throughout the United States, with 31% being in the Midwest, 27% in the West, 24% in the Northeast, and 18% in the South, indicating that these results are not unique to any one part of the country.

Florida Budget Update: Looking Better, But Legislators Cautious

An updated report by Amy Baker, chief economist of Florida's Office of Economic and Demographic Research shows that Florida's financial picture continues to improve, although modestly. According to EDR, long range revenue projections for the upcoming year indicate no budget shortfall.

Legislative leadership remains cautious, as does Governor Scott, since recent updates do not include updates in Medicaid spending. Medicaid accounts for $21B of the current state budget, and with unemployment still a problem for Florida, a potential increase in Medicaid spending may cause an impact to the current positive trend.

HBI and Tallahassee Builders Association Mentor Future Builders

Youth participating in Home Builders Institute's (HBI) Mentoring Program (formally C-CORE) had a great opportunity to spend time with several builders in the Tallahassee community recently. Paul Thompson, Florida Home Builders Association and Doug Barton, Alan Weekley and William Kimberl IV, members of the Tallahassee Builders Association, served as mentors to the youth and gave a presentation on possible careers in the construction industry and trades.

Over 35 youth and mentors attended the morning event held at a home under construction in nearby Southwood. William Kimberl talked about career opportunities in construction; Alan Weekley outlined the special challenges faced by remodelers; and Doug Barton walked the young people through the construction process.

The three TBA builders enjoyed participating in the program and hope that some of these young people will decide to become future builders and trade professionals.

PACE Marion Girls Awarded $500 by Community Foundation

PACE Marion girls recently received an award from the Community Foundation in Marion County for developing a project to create awareness for disabilities. The Youth Philanthropy in Action program, (YPIA) sponsored by the Non-profit Business Council of the Ocala/Marion County Chamber, provides a unique opportunity for Marion County youth to learn about making a difference through giving. The six-week curriculum, presented by volunteers from local non-profits, is designed to educate Marion County students about the concept and implementation of philanthropy. It also challenges them to think about how they would personally and also collectively support a cause.

This summer PACE welcomed YPIA into the Spirited Girls classroom. The curriculum included brainstorming ideas that the youth could implement to help causes. To stimulate ideas, research is conducted, guest speakers from non-profits visit the class and $500 of play money - or PACE bucks - is promised so the students have something to work with.

Girls broke into groups and presented their ideas to the entire student body, and a vote was taken leading to "PACE Caring for Disabilities" as the winning project. This project included ideas for a family fun day with activities such as tying an arm behind someone's back to simulate loss of a limb. It was a great ending when the girls were greeted by Barbara Fitos, executive director of the Community Foundation, with a real check for the funding.

PACE Marion is grateful to the YPIA volunteers and the Community Foundation for such a unique and meaningful experience for PACE girls.

Leon PACE Program Helps Girls to Embrace a Healthy Lifestyle

A new program at the PACE Center for Girls in Leon County is addressing the obesity and unhealthy eating risk factors of girls. The FSU Multidisciplinary Center's School Mental Health program has partnered with PACE Leon to pilot a semester-long high school course designed to teach and promote healthy living among PACE Leon students.

The project, funded by a grant from the Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Florida Foundation, incorporates classes related to food and nutrition education, including cooking demonstrations and food gardening, fitness classes including yoga, dance, and other engaging health activities, and a behavioral intervention called S.T.R.E.N.G.T.H. -Self-guided Training for Respecting, Empowering, and Nurturing Girls Through Health to assist young girls in identifying and integrating healthy behaviors and wellness-promoting activities into their daily lives.

The girls attend the class 5 days a week and earn a health credit. Twice a week the program focuses on nutrition education, including food demonstrations. Twice a week the girls participate in physical education such as Zumba, yoga, and hip hop dance. Once a week the girls attend a group session facilitated by an FSU psychologist doctoral student and a PACE Counselor.
